Telephone Talks
No. 10.

THE switchboard, which is the most intricate and interesting adjunct of the telephone business, is divided into sections and there are usually three operators' positions in each section. An operator sits at each position and from this point can reach the line of every subscriber in the exchange. However, only a limited number of subscribers' answering jacks terminate in front of each operator. This causes it to be possible for an operator to connect a calling party with any number on the switchboard, but she can answer the calls of only a few subscribers. Whenever a new section is added to the switchboard it is necessary to run the wires and connect the line of every subscriber into the new section.

Sometimes subscribers fail to answer their telephones promptly and when they do answer it are told by the operator that she did not ring. This may be literally true if the calling party has grown impatient and hung up his receiver. Only one operator can answer you when you ask for a number but any operator at the switchboard can ring your telephone bell. If an operator has a rush of calls those on each side of her come to her assistance and a supervisor is always at hand to help her out.

The work of the operators is interesting and fascinating and is well worth a visit to our exchange. We hope every subscriber will accept our often repeated invitation and visit one of our exchanges.
